Big was beautiful, but micro is cool – the 21st century Engineering (SCIT1091)

Introduction	Big is beautiful, like what steam engines and railways used to be two centuries ago, but not necessarily essential in the 21 century engineering. Modern engineering is micro, compact and can be incorporated into every science that you know to turn it into a product. If that is what you are good at, come and join this talk.
Programme Type	Engineering Talk
Speaker	Dr. Wing LAU is a Fellow of the Institution of Mechanical Engineers (United Kingdom), a Fellow of the Institution of Nuclear Engineers and a Chartered Engineer. He spent 20 years working in the UK's nuclear industry before joining the University of Oxford.
