Content : Gifted students may have higher chances of success than their peers in their talented areas. However, before they attain their outstanding achievement, gifted students may also experience failures. Without adequate mental skills to deal with failures, they may not be able to persist in their effort and have their potential fully realised. This seminar aims to introduce to the participants some mental skills that are critical to equip their gifted children on facing failures during their talent development process. At this seminar, participants will learn about the concepts and application of perceived control and dispositional optimism which could help their gifted children deal with failures during their talent development journey. A Q&A session will be arranged during the seminar.

Intended Learning Outcomes : Upon completion of this seminar, parents should be able to:

1. facilitate their gifted children to learn about the concepts and the application of perceived control;
