

I manage my project! (LEAS2421)

Introduction

A project is temporary in that it has a defined beginning and end in time, and therefore defined scope and resources. And a project is unique in that it is not a routine operation, but a specific set of operations designed to accomplish a singular goal. So, a project team often includes people who don't usually work together – sometimes from different organisations and across multiple geographies. Project Management, then, is the application of knowledge, skills, tools, and techniques to project activities to meet the project requirements.

In this programme, we aim at providing experiential learning opportunities through personal, orienteering and group challenges to:

1. introduce the concepts, approaches, models and tools of project management regarding various leadership situations;
2. facilitate students to lead/ participate in a project team in order to achieve group goals and meet project requirements;
3. allow students to execute the skills learnt to serve and contribute the local community and disadvantage groups.
