| Introduction | After meeting different people in his research, a semiconductor scientist questioned what the education is and what his future would be. He then decided to leave the research field and devoted to science education as a secondary school teacher. A few years later, he was a co-founder of an education centre. His new chapter of his education began when he took up the role as the centre Director. His remarkable achievement to science education was having taught and nurtured tens of thousands of students and teachers in his courses and education activities. Many new opportunities emerge in this fast-changing world. But it is no easy decision to leave one's comfort zone to take up new challenges. Dr Wong Kam Yiu Jimmy, the Executive Director of The Hong Kong Academy for Gifted Education would share how he became an educator from a scientist. When opportunities came, what made him so determined to take up challenges. Dr Wong Kam Yiu Jimmy is the Executive Director of The Hong Kong Academy for Gifted Education. He obtained his PhD in materials science and began his research in semiconductor the United Kingdom and Hong Kong. He is then devoted to education in Hong Kong as a book author, education TV show guest speaker, secondary school teacher and the director of education centre. His exceptional contribution to education was well acknowledged and brought him the Chief Executive's Commendation for Community Service in 2011. |
