

Life Education Series: Self-Management (F1LES002T)

Introduction of the Talk

Gifted students face no less pressure than their age peers as study shows that more than 70% of gifted students in Hong Kong are perfectionists (Chan, 2010) and the unhealthy perfectionistic mindset may bring along enormous stress. Poorly managed stresses may affect one's academic performance, emotional wellbeing, and even physical and mental health. Therefore, self-management and self-regulation skills are very important to these students. This Life Education series will address pressure faced by gifted students in general and the coping strategies. We have invited a guest who is experienced in stress management to share with us his experiences and struggles in handling academic and social pressure. We hope that participants will get some inspiration from his sharing and their self-management skills will be enhanced.

Introduction of the Series

In response to the developmental needs of gifted students, the Life Education series discusses topics of affective education such as self-concept; self-management; personal attitude, beliefs and values; emotion management; career and life planning education; social and communication skills; leadership training and problem-solving skills and resilience (EDB, 2015). Professionals, alumni and gifted youth are invited to share their personal stories and inspire students in this platform.
